INTRODUCTION

I. Program Description and Relationship to System-Level Goals

A. Briefly describe within a few paragraphs the degree program under consideration, including (a) level; (b) emphases, including concentrations, tracks, or specializations; (c) total number of credit hours; and (d) overall purpose, including examples of employment or education opportunities that may be available to program graduates.

The proposed Ph.D. in Government at the University of South Florida focuses on research and teaching in the area of Sustainable Communities in a globalizing world. More specifically, the doctoral program addresses the impact of the globalization processes on public policy and political communities. The Ph.D. in Government will utilize the rich expertise of the 26 full-time faculty members in the Department of Government and International Affairs, which consists of three programs in Political Science, International Studies, and Public Administration. Our doctoral program's theoretical depth, methodological rigor, and emphasis on practical application will provide a multidisciplinary perspective to the study of governance in a global environment. No other institution of higher learning in Florida, and a precious few in the nation, has adopted such an innovative approach to governance in the age of globalization. Regardless of students' career goals, this Ph.D. in Government will enable graduates to conduct sophisticated research and contribute to policy making in the field of international relations, comparative politics, American government, political theory, and public administration.

The proposed program offers students the option to focus on one of the two tracks: Public Affairs and Sustainable Political Communities. Only a department as diverse as GIA can offer such a two track Ph.D. program.

The Public Affairs track will emphasize the study and analysis of structures, processes, institutions, and policy outcomes of governing systems at the local, national and international levels. The subject of governance essentially encompasses, but is not limited to, political institutions and their performance. Students who select this track will understand the functions and the administration of the major institutions responsible for formulating and implementing public policy. They will evaluate the competencies and performance of these institutions and will propose how to improve their capacity for effective decision making. Students with an interest in public administration will find this track most useful.

The Sustainable Political Communities track will focus on human development in the context of a globalizing world. While "development" has a wide range of meanings, our Ph.D. program on Government builds on the assumption that development includes the modification of societal institutions (e.g., political, economic, educational, health) in ways that can expand the choices and opportunities for members of the society. This applies to local, national, and international levels. This track will focus on the relationship between changes in governance at all levels and the range of choices and opportunities for individuals, societies, and the global population. This relationship will be considered within a number of issues including, but not limited to, war and violence, security, the environment, civil and social justice, the global economy, and health. Students with interests in Political Science and International Relations will find this track most relevant and useful.

The driving force behind our innovative Ph.D. in Government is a linked model of doctoral education that ensures multiple connections—or linkages—between Government and its partner Ph.D. programs in Sociology and History (other linked programs will be developed in the future). Figure 1, below, illustrates the nature of these linkages at five levels of the program's curriculum:

1) Level 1. Entering students must begin their doctoral program with an interdisciplinary professional seminar or PROSEM. It will be taught by members of the three linked programs. This seminar will include students from each of the three linked programs and will introduce the relevant epistemologies, methodologies and theories that will guide their future studies.

2) Level 2. Students must complete both core requirements and core electives (listed in the Figure as "Disciplinary Sub Areas") in Government. Among these core requirements are the major field requirements. Courses listed among the core electives in Government are also made available to students in Sociology and History.

3) Level 3. Students must complete "core electives in linked degree programs."

4) Level 4. Students must complete the capstone interdisciplinary seminar.

5) Level 5. Students must complete the doctoral dissertation, which will result from this interdisciplinary process and incorporate interdisciplinary topics and committees.

The program requires a minimum of 57 credit hours beyond the master's degree.

The applied component of our Ph.D. program will provide excellent training for students who wish to pursue careers in the private or public sectors. These include positions in business, local government, state government, national government, international organizations (e.g. United Nations), and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Further, we believe this doctoral program will be of great interest to the US Military for training high ranking officers who must operate in the globalized world, including officers stationed locally at MacDill Air Force Base in Tampa.

A recent study by the RAND Corporation found that increased globalization has created a vibrant demand for well-trained leaders in business and government. Especially since the September 11th terrorist attacks, American government and business leaders are required to possess skills in strategic international understanding. The RAND study concluded, "It is critical for leaders to have a strategic vision of where the organization is going and how to place it in a global context while understanding the implications of operating in different localities." The study also found that there is a shortage of leaders who are competent in this area, and that education institutions have not moved to meet this demand.[1] The proposed Ph.D. program in Government will fill this void by training students in the politics, policy, and governance of the globalized world.

Today, local, regional, national, and global government institutions are required to address opportunities and constraints that originate from any part of the world and at an unprecedented pace. The statewide conference on "Florida's Global Frontiers: Impacts of Trade Liberalization," hosted by USF in September 2004, established how globalization has far-reaching effects on Florida's industries, workforce, environment, and public policy. The proposed doctoral program allows faculty and students to address such effects. Hence, the program will prepare bright, talented students for whom career opportunities will be available at all levels of state, county and local government in Florida and elsewhere.

This doctoral program in Government will also contribute to future private sector workforce development in Florida and elsewhere. One example of how this may occur concerns corporate management of the global economy. The SUS Strategic Plan makes reference to Enterprise Florida's focus on Information Technology (IT) as one of four sectors of growth. IT continues to be a vital sector for Florida, particularly within the I-4 Initiative. Research still in progress at USF on IT within the I-4 corridor has already established that its presence in Florida is diffused across a wide-ranging management structure that includes Canada, England, and other countries. As a consequence, IT Chief Executive Officers and managers must now know how governance issues (e.g., corporate social responsibility, regulatory impacts of trade agreements, local zoning requirements) at multiple levels (local through global) affect corporate growth. This is not unique to the IT sector. The immediate concern in the United States over "offshore outsourcing of labor" confirms that we now live in a global economy. Leaders and managers in several industrial sectors must understand the political repercussions when making decisions about labor cost differentials across countries. The necessity of acquiring such knowledge is equally applicable for those seeking careers in labor management and organization, environmental organizations, and, of course, in the field of public policy making and administration.

B. Describe how the proposed program is consistent with the current State University System (SUS) Strategic Planning Goals. Identify which goals the program will directly support and which goals the program will indirectly support. (See the SUS Strategic Plan at http://www.flbog.org/StrategicResources/)

The proposed program directly supports all four of the SUS Strategic Goals:

1. Access to and production of degrees;
2. Meeting statewide professional and workforce needs;
3. Building world-class academic programs and research capacity; and
4. Meeting community needs and fulfilling unique institutional responsibilities.

The PhD in Government is also consistent with USF's strategic goal to establish and maintain Ph.D. programs of outstanding quality that attract top-quality faculty and students who engage in research that enhances local, regional, national, and international communities. This Ph.D. program in Government is unique because it emphasizes a nexus among politics, public administration and globalization. As part of the set of programs that comprise the Global Sustainable Healthy Communities initiative at US, the proposed program will support the University's mission and one of the top three research universities in Florida and its continued progress towards establishing itself in the top echelon of research universities nationally.

INSTITUTIONAL AND STATE LEVEL ACCOUNTABILITY

II. Need and Demand

A. Need: Describe national, state, and/or local data that support the need for more people to be prepared in this program at this level. Reference national, state, and/or local plans or reports that support the need for this program and requests for the proposed program which have emanated from a perceived need by agencies or industries in your service area. Cite any specific need for research and service that the program would fulfill.

Academia has clearly recognized the importance of providing a rich understanding of politics and policy in the globalizing world, and the proposed program's emphasis on methodologically sophisticated and theoretically relevant research will meet this urgent need. USF is a leader in moving in this direction; most universities have yet to do so. Of the eight Ph.D. programs worldwide that specialize in globalization, none are offered as degrees in Government. Four of these programs are in the United States and, of those, three are offered by institutions that also offer a separate Ph.D. in Political Science (the fourth is a Ph.D. in Anthropology with a focus on globalization-related topics). In proposing this program, the University of South Florida will stand at the vanguard of this new phase of social science in general and governance in particular.

Further, its unique focus on sustainable communities in a globalizing world will make the proposed Ph.D. program competitive with more established doctoral programs in Political Science and Public Administration. Globalization describes the newest phase of multifaceted political alignments that signify the onset of an interconnected, world-wide interaction of politics, security, economics, and culture. These changes hold much promise for the advancement of humankind, but they also bring much peril. Consequently, profound and sophisticated knowledge of the world today has become increasingly more essential to success in higher education and in the public and private sectors than in the past.

The applied component of our Ph.D. program will provide excellent training for students who wish to pursue careers in the private or public sectors. These include positions in business, local government, state government, national government, international organizations (e.g. United Nations), and non-governmental organizations (NGOs). Furthermore, this doctoral program will be of great interest to the US Military for training high ranking officers, who must operate in the globalized world, including officers stationed at MacDill Airbase in Tampa.

The Department of Government and International Affairs studied the demand for Political Science doctoral programs that is now being met by the three doctoral programs already in place within the State University System (i.e., Florida State University, University of Florida, and Florida International University). The emphasis in the three existing programs is such that students graduating from these programs continue to fill the need for specialists trained in particular subfields of the disciplines (e.g., experts in American Government, Political Theory, State and Local Government, Foreign Policy, Research Methods, Political Theory).

The proposed program will not compete with the existing Florida programs, because we will train students who are generalists in the field of Political Science but also meet the needs in both the public and private sectors for individuals who are well versed in understanding the relationship between government and globalization. First, we know that the growth of the community colleges throughout the United States is accompanied by the rising demand for individuals who can teach a broad range of courses in the field of Political Science. Second, we are aware that government institutions at all levels are interested in hiring civil servants with expertise in both Political Science and contemporary globalization.

The Department also conducted a comprehensive search of national and international Ph.D. programs and found only eight Ph.D. programs related to globalization. Four are located in the United States and four are located in Europe.

European Ph.D. programs emphasizing Globalization:

1. Title: Doctoral Program in Globalization, Development and International Cooperation
   University: Universidad del Pias Vasco / Euskal Herriko Unibertsitatea
   Host Program: Instituto Hegoa and the Department of Applied Economics
   Country : Spain

2. Title: DPhil Education Institute of Developmental Studies
   University: University of Sussex
   Host Program: The Integrative Graduate and Research Traineeship's Program in International Development
   Country: United Kingdom

3. Title: PhD Research Study Program: Globalization and Social Change – Interdisciplinary Critical Studies
   University: Aalborg Unversitet
   Host Program: Research Center on Development and International Relations
   Country: Denmark

4. Title: Globalization and Security Cluster (specialization within PhD)
   University: University of South Hampton

Host Program: Mountbatten Center for International Studies &
Politics and International Relations Division
Country: United Kingdom

United States Ph.D. programs emphasizing Globalization:

1. Title: Doctor of Philosophy in Global Affairs
   University: Rutgers – the State University of New Jersey
   Host Program: Center for Global Governance (CGCG)
   Location: New Brunswick, NJ USA

2. Title: PhD in Anthropology
   Globalization and International Development Specialization
   University: Southern Methodist University
   Host Program: Department of Anthropology
   Location: Dallas-Ft. Worth, TX USA

3. Title: Interdisciplinary PhD Emphasis in Global Studies, Global International Studies
   University: University of California, Santa Barbara
   Host Program: Anthropology, English, History, Political Science, Religious Studies and Sociology (students are PhD students in any of the above disciplines coordinated through Global and International Studies Department)
   Location: Santa Barbara, CA USA

4. Title: Comparative and Global Studies in education in the Social and Philosophical Foundations of Education
   University: State University of New York, at Buffalo
   Host Program: School of Education, PhD program in Social and Philosophical Foundations of Education
   Location: Buffalo, NY USA

Of the four institutions offering Globalization-related programs in the United States, three--Rutgers, the University of California/Santa Barbara, and the State University of New York at Buffalo--also offer separate Ph.D. programs in political science. In addition to the three programs in political science, there are 135 Ph.D. programs in Political Science in the United States. None of these, including the programs in Florida State University System (i.e., Florida State University, University of Florida, and Florida International University) offers a Ph.D. program that focuses on globalization-related issues. No private institutions in Florida offer such a program.

There are 75 Ph.D. programs in Political Science in other parts of the world. It should be noted that other academic traditions classify what is commonly held to be 'Political Science' in the United States and Canada under different names and disciplines (Politics, Political Sociology, and Government). Were these search parameters used along with other permutations of fields related to Political Science (International Relations, International Studies, and International Affairs etc.), the total number of institutions offering a PhD level degree would be much higher. Such a search would further illustrate the clear uniqueness of the proposed program. Despite the limited scope of the search, the results and potential for global uniqueness of the proposed program is astounding. Only the University of South Florida will offer a doctoral program in Government/Political Science with a focus on globalization.

B. Demand: Describe data that support the assumption that students will enroll in the proposed program. Include descriptions of surveys or other communications with prospective students.

A recent study by the RAND Corporation found that increased globalization has created a vibrant demand for well-trained leaders in business and government. Especially since the September 11th terrorist attacks, American government and business leaders are required to possess skills in strategic international understanding. The RAND study concluded, "It is critical for leaders to have a strategic vision of where the organization is going and how to place it in a global context while understanding the implications of operating in different localities." The study also found that there is a shortage of leaders who are competent in this area, and that education institutions have not moved to meet this demand.[2] Consequently, our Ph.D. program in Government will fill this void by training students in the politics, policy, and governance of the globalized world.

The Department of Government and International Affairs informally queried colleagues directing the globalization research centers affiliated with the Patel Center at USF (i.e., those at University of Hawaii/Manoa, University of California/Los Angeles, and The George Washington University) and all of them report there is student interest in pursuing doctoral studies in globalization at their institutions.

The Department conducted a survey of potential students using an internet based survey instrument. The program was described so as to provide some detail concerning the nature and scope of the program but no details concerning program requirements. The questions were meant to elicit three kinds of information relevant for designing the PhD program:

- Demographic makeup of potential students
- Familiarity with the Concepts of Globalization
- Interest in pursuing a Ph.D. in general, a Ph.D. in Political Science with an emphasis on Globalization, and such a Ph.D. offered at the University of South Florida

Survey Populations

The first survey population was students enrolled in USF Political Science Graduate level classes during the Fall 2004 term. Participants were given information and a website link that would take them to the electronic survey.

The second population was made up of students with an expressed interest in pursuing a PhD in a field related to Globalization (key words included 'international', 'development', 'international affairs', 'international studies', 'political science', 'globalization', and 'public policy'). These students were sent an email which included a request for participation as well as a link to the survey website.

Both populations responded to the same survey. In order to maintain integrity in the survey results, the purpose of the survey was not revealed.

In both cases, students interested in results were encouraged to make a request to the department to receive information about the final results.

Survey findings:

Demographic Analysis of Respondents:

Survey respondents represent a variety of age, gender, academic standing, field of study, and present university affiliation. While the actual number of respondents was less than desired (i.e., 82 as of 25 October 2004), the variety of responses received offers valuable information about the respondents, their views on the proposed program, and the likelihood that they will apply to the proposed program.

Age and Gender

A majority of the respondents to the survey (63%) were below the age of 30 [20-24 / 33%; 25-29 / 30%] and evenly split between females (51%) and males (49%).

Class Standing

A majority of the respondents to the survey classified themselves as 'Graduate' students (68%) with 3% classifying themselves as 'Juniors', 11% as 'Seniors', 13% as 'PhD' students and 5% as 'Other'.

Fields of Study

A majority of those surveyed named their major field of study as Political Science (41%) or International Studies (20%), both of which are majors offered by the Department of Government and International Affairs. The remaining respondents indicated involvement in other fields of study, such as Economics (3%), Education (5%), Environmental Studies (3%), History (3%), Humanities (1%) and Sociology (1%) or 'Other' (24%).[3]

USF vs Non USF Status

The sample was almost evenly split between those attending the University of South Florida and those who are not: USF Students 51% Non USF Students 49%

Concepts of Globalization:

Survey Question	Total Responses	% Agree	% No Opinion	% Disagree	# Strongly Agree	# Somewhat Agree	# No Opinion	# Somewhat Disagree	# Strongly Disagree
Concepts of Globalization have been discussed in my present discipline or field of study.	82	84	1	15	40	29	1	6	6
Concepts of Globalization are relevant to my present discipline or field of study.	82	98	0	2	60	20	0	1	1
My present discipline or field of study could benefit from more discussion of Globalization.	82	91	5	4	48	27	4	2	1
I feel that Globalization is an important area of study for understanding the modern world.	82	96	3	1	64	15	1	1	1

The results of the survey indicate that discussion of globalization concepts is high in courses respondents are taking and respondents feel more discussion of these concepts is necessary.

Interest in pursuing a PhD:

Survey Question	Total Responses	% Agree	% No Opinion	% Disagree	# Strongly Agree	# Somewhat Agree	# No Opinion	# Somewhat Disagree	# Strongly Disagree
I am interested in pursuing a PhD	82	82	2	16	53	14	2	8	5

Among those surveyed there was a strong interest in pursuing a Ph.D. (type of Ph.D. unspecified).

Interest in pursuing a PhD at the University of South Florida:

Survey Question	Total Responses	% Agree*	% No Opinion	% Disagree*	# Strongly Agree	# Somewhat Agree	# No Opinion	# Somewhat Disagree	# Strongly Disagree
I am interested in pursuing a PhD at the University of South Florida	80	49	23	26	23	17	19	4	17

While the largest percentage of respondents favored pursing a Ph.D. at the University of South Florida, there was an even distribution between those who disagreed and those who had no opinion.

[3] 40% of 'Other' responses were described as Public Administration/ Policy/ Management. In addition small numbers of other majors indicated were Anthropology of Religion, Business Administration, Criminology, French and Law (a total of 23 responses in 'Other' were submitted)

It must be remembered however, that no information about the University or the Tampa Bay Area was distributed with the survey material. Those unfamiliar with the University or its surrounding area were likely not to respond in either the affirmative or negative without further information. The relatively high percentage of responses of 'No Opinion' (23%) illustrates this point.

Interest in PhD in Political Science with an emphasis on globalization:

Survey Question	Total Responses	% Agree*	% No Opinion	% Disagree*	# Strongly Agree	# Somewhat Agree	# No Opinion	# Somewhat Disagree	# Strongly Disagree
I am interested in pursuing a PhD in Political Science with and emphasis in Globalization	82	59	11	30	25	23	9	8	17

The response to this question supports (i.e., 59% of respondents) offering a doctoral program in Political Science Ph.D. with an emphasis on globalization.

Interest in PhD in Political Science with and emphasis on globalization at the University of South Florida:

Survey Question	Total Responses	% Agree*	% No Opinion	% Disagree*	# Strongly Agree	# Somewhat Agree	# No Opinion	# Somewhat Disagree	# Strongly Disagree
I am interested in pursuing a PhD in Political Science with and emphasis in Globalization at the University of South Florida	82	39	23	38	16	16	19	7	24

The response to this question supports (i.e., 39% of respondents) the University of South Florida offering a doctoral program in Political Science Ph.D. with an emphasis on globalization, although the percent is higher (i.e., 59%) for such a Ph.D. program when geographic location is not specified.

Again, the survey provided no background information concerning the University or the surrounding area. In addition the survey did not include any information about the possible number, types and fields of courses that would make up the proposed Ph.D. program. Nor did it provide information concerning fellowships, financial assistance or monetary benefits of program participation. This lack of information is likely shown as the results clearly indicate that a high percentage of those surveyed had 'No Opinion' concerning the Ph.D. program at USF.

The increased level of disagreement may indicate also that some students are not willing to relocate as they may already be participating in a Ph.D. producing degree program in another part of the state or country.

Survey Results Summary

The survey clearly shows not only familiarity with concepts related to globalization, but also an interest in engaging in further study about the topic. Further, in general terms, there is significant interest in participating in a Ph.D. program focusing on globalization.

C. If similar programs (either private or public) exist in the state, identify the institution(s) and geographic location(s). Summarize the outcome(s) of any communication with such programs with regard to the potential impact on their enrollment and opportunities for possible collaboration (instruction and research). Provide data that support the need for an additional program.

There are currently three doctoral programs in Political Science/Government within the State University System, at the University of Florida (Gainesville), Florida State University (Tallahassee), and Florida International University (Miami). The proposed USF program is unique within the SUS in that it focuses on the nexus of politics, public administration, and globalization, with a specific emphasis on sustainable communities in a global environment. As a result of its placement within the Global Sustainable Healthy Communities education and research thrust at USF, students in the program will learn to apply the research methods and fundamental theoretical perspectives of our discipline to the challenges of multi-disciplinary curricular and research activities. Each student will thus have the opportunity to experience the relevance of our discipline in the broader context of globalization, sustainability and community. At the same time, the career path of each student is assured either along future academic pathways or in public or private/corporate sustainable development routes. No other institution in the SUS currently offers doctoral students in Political Science/Government such an opportunity.

By comparison to existing programs within the SUS, this Ph.D. program in Government is unique in that it reintegrates the many subfields of Political Science, International Studies, and Public Administration so that students can relate knowledge from these subfields to the current status of public policy, government and human development in the world. There are three doctoral programs in Political Science and one doctoral program in International Relations in the SUS. The three Political Science doctoral programs at Florida State University, University of Florida, and Florida International University continue to rely on the many core subfields developed in Political Science since the end of World War II (e.g., American Government, State and Local Politics, Urban Politics, Political Behavior, Methods of Political Analysis, Political Theory, Comparative Politics, International Relations, and Public Policy). These three programs are discipline-based rather than interdisciplinary in focus. The doctoral program in International Relations at Florida International University adopts an innovative interdisciplinary approach to the study of global affairs which, however, does not have as a central focus the disciplinary knowledge base of Political Science and Public Administration. The proposed USF program, on the other hand, seeks to go beyond the traditional areas of the disciplines by offering an interdisciplinary approach to the study of globalization, relying on relevant knowledge from many disciplines including history and sociology. The proposed Ph.D. in Government will train students to become generalists in the field of Government who are also able to integrate knowledge from Political Science, International Relations and Public Administration, as well as from other disciplines, such as History and Sociology. No other university in Florida offers such a unique program.

D. Use Table 1 (A for undergraduate and B for graduate) to categorize projected student headcount (HC) and Full Time Equivalents (FTE) according to primary sources. Generally undergraduate FTE will be calculated as 40 credit hours per year and graduate FTE will be calculated as 32 credit hours per year. Describe the rationale underlying enrollment projections. If, initially, students within the institution are expected to change majors to enroll in the proposed program, describe the shifts from disciplines that will likely occur.

See Table One B.

The proposed Ph.D. program will enroll primarily three kinds of students. First, we will recruit students from USF. Based on our survey results, these will be students who have completed another degree from USF. These will not be students who are recruited from other graduate programs at USF. The second kind of student we will attract will come from other universities in the United States. It is clear, from our research on Ph.D. programs in the United States, that the proposed program is unique in that no other institutions in the United States offer a doctoral program in Government with a focus on globalization. Finally, in the third year of the program we will begin to recruit students from other countries.

E. Indicate what steps will be taken to achieve a diverse student body in this program, and identify any minority groups that will be favorably or unfavorably impacted. The university's Equal Opportunity Officer should read this section and then sign and date in the area below.

The Department of Government and International Affairs is fully committed to the principle of equal education and employment opportunities without regard to race, color, marital status, sex, sexual orientation, religion, national origin, disability, age, or disabled veterans status as provided by law and in accordance with the University's respect for personal dignity.

Through its research, teaching, and service efforts, the department's faculty is committed to disseminating core values that promote diversity. One of the goals of Government and International Affairs, as outlined in the Department Mission Statement, is to promote student understanding of and tolerance for different racial and ethnic cultures as well as gender differences. The rich diversity of our faculty and the broad nature of our program (i.e. International Studies) also promotes a respect for equal opportunity amongst our student population.

In order to achieve its goals, the Department will seek to attract students representing diverse populations. This will include recruitment efforts being initiated both nationally and locally. At the national level, we will work with the American Political Science Association's Minority Student Recruitment Project to advertise the Ph.D. in Government to potential minority candidates. We will also encourage potential students to apply for the American Political Science Association's Minority Fellows Program, which is only available to minority students in a Political Science doctoral program. We will also advertise the Ph.D. in Government on the American Society for Public Administration (ASPA) Conference of Minority Public Administrator's (COMPA) listserv and Latino-Planning listserv. At the state level, we will send recruitment letters to predominantly minority colleges and universities in Florida and the Southeastern United States. At the local level, the Department will work with the USF Admissions Office to actively recruit minority students through various organizations. We will also request that the Institute for the Study of Latin America and the Caribbean, with which the Department has a close working relationship, to disseminate information amongst their student population. Finally, the Department will work with the Graduate Studies Office to advertise any available scholarship and fellowships for underrepresented populations.

III. Budget

A. Use Table 2 to display projected costs and associated funding sources for Year 1 and Year 5 of program operation. Use Table 3 to show how existing Education & General funds will be shifted to support the new program in Year 1. In narrative form, summarize the contents of both tables, identifying the source of both current and new resources to be devoted to the proposed program. (Data for Year 1 and Year 5 reflect snapshots in time rather than cumulative costs.)

The proposed Ph.D. program can be implemented based on the available resources within the Department. Resources will be reallocated among the three programs of the Department of Government and International Affairs (Political Science, International Affairs, and Public Administration) to ensure the successful implementation of the proposed program. The specialties and expertise of the Department's two most recent hires in Political Science and International Relations have been and will be consistent with the needs of the proposed Ph.D. program. Upcoming retirements will allow for four new hires in Years 2-5.

B. If other programs will be impacted by a reallocation of resources for the proposed program, identify the program and provide a justification for reallocating resources. Specifically address the potential negative impacts that implementation of the proposed program will have on related undergraduate programs (i.e., shift in faculty effort, reallocation of instructional resources, reduced enrollment rates, greater use of adjunct faculty and teaching assistants). Explain what steps will be taken to mitigate any such impacts. Also, discuss the potential positive impacts that the proposed program might have on related undergraduate programs (i.e., increased undergraduate research opportunities, improved quality of instruction associated with cutting-edge research, improved labs and library resources).

The proposed program is designed so that existing faculty can handle the load with a modest reallocation of time and effort initially. There will be an overall positive impact of doctoral program implementation, as we will have advanced graduate students to energize the classrooms and there will be increased interaction between the undergraduate and graduate students.

The expected impact on the undergraduate program will result from several factors. First, the existence of a Ph.D. program will enhance USF's attractiveness to top FTIC students with an interest in political science, public policy/administration, and international affairs. Second, Ph.D. students' funded dissertation research external grant money will provide more undergraduate research opportunities. Third, Ph.D. students' participation in research projects will provide more opportunities for our undergraduates to be involved in research activities. Fourth, a Ph.D. program will allow undergraduate students the opportunity to meet and converse with graduate students, thus encouraging undergraduate students to pursue further education. Fifth, Ph.D. students will be actively engaged in undergraduate classroom teaching. Finally, Ph.D. students will be serving as role models to our undergraduate majors.

The proposed program should not have any negative impact on the department's M.A. program. In fact, we anticipate that the Ph.D. program will have many positive impacts on the department's M.A. program. Each year we lose several high quality applicants once they learn we have only a terminal M.A. program. The overall quality (including GRE scores) of M.A. students will increase once a Ph.D. program is in place. Furthermore, just as Ph.D. students can serve as a role model to undergraduates, they will do the same for M.A. students. As a linked Ph.D. program we anticipate that new interdisciplinary research opportunities for our M.A. students will emerge, a strengthened sense of community across disciplines, and healthy interdisciplinary interactions between Ph.D. and M.A. students regarding instructional ideas and innovations that will surely strengthen undergraduate education.

The proposed program will have little or no effect on other departments. The areas that may experience a slight increase in graduate enrollment when students take graduate electives are Geography, Environmental Science and the College of Business.

C. Describe other potential impacts on related programs or departments (e.g., increased need for general education or common prerequisite courses, or increased need for required or elective courses outside of the proposed major).

We do not anticipate any negative impact on other programs or departments. Some programs within the Global Sustainable Healthy Communities initiative (such as Geography/Environment Science and Policy, Anthropology, Sociology, or History) may experience modest increases in demand as our students enroll in elective courses, but these impacts have been planned for as part of the discussions among departments involved in the interdisciplinary initiative.

D. Describe what steps have been taken to obtain information regarding resources (financial and in-kind) available outside the institution (businesses, industrial organizations, governmental entities, etc.). Describe the external resources that appear to be available to support the proposed program.

The department has worked closely with USF's Patel Center for Global Solutions which is a central source of support for research related to the proposed doctoral program. The Center's Director, who is a faculty member in the department, has been P.I. on over $4.2 million of external funding from the U.S. Department of Education. The Center has also received over $810,000 of subcontract awards from external funding and is an annual recipient of subcontract awards from the Title VI Florida Network for Global Studies. The Center's funds are made available to faculty, through sub-contracts, to promote research and education on globalization related issues. The Center also assists faculty in the department in submitting proposals to a number of public funding agencies and private foundations.

The department partners with the Florida Institute of Government at USF. This Institute provides support for faculty who work on projects involving state and local government agencies.

IV. Projected Benefit of the Program to the University, Local Community, and State

Use information from Table 1, Table 2, and the supporting narrative for "Need and Demand" to prepare a concise statement that describes the projected benefit to the university, local community, and the state if the program is implemented. The projected benefits can be both quantitative and qualitative in nature, but there needs to be a clear distinction made between the two in the narrative.

The proposed PhD in Government will benefit the University by contributing to USF's goal of readiness for membership in the American Association of Universities. USF's rapid growth over the past fifty years has led to the development of a significant number of doctoral programs in STEM fields. As the University prepares to advance to its next level of accomplishment, it must strengthen its graduate education and research in the humanities and social sciences. The PhD in Government and the linked doctoral programs in Sociology and History, also part of the Global Sustainable Healthy Communities initiative, will help bring this about.

The PhD in Government and the linked doctoral programs within USF's innovative and integrative Global Sustainable Healthy Communities initiative will help business and industry in the State of Florida to grow and maintain an advantageous position in the global arena through access to the advances and understanding the issues and solutions of sustainable healthy communities; and through access to graduates trained to serve as leaders in a global, sustainable future.

V. Access and Articulation -- Bachelor's Degrees Only -- NA

Institutional Readiness

VI. Related Institutional Mission and Strength

A. Describe how the goals of the proposed program relate to the institutional mission statement as contained in the SUS Strategic Plan and the University Strategic Plan.

The proposed Ph.D. program in Government is included on USF's list of proposed programs for the 2006-13 planning period. The proposed program is consistent with the strategic priorities of both the Board of Governors and the University of South Florida. Specifically, the University of South Florida's evolution into a nationally recognized, metropolitan-based research institution demands the establishment and maintenance of quality graduate programs at the highest level of educational attainment. This proposal responds to that plan's goals by increasing doctoral degree production in political science/international relations/public administration that will attract the best and brightest faculty and students.

The proposed Ph.D. in Government is fully consistent with the University's Strategic Plan. The University of South Florida's evolution into a nationally recognized, metropolitan based research institution requires the establishment and maintenance of quality graduate programs at the highest level of educational attainment. This Ph.D. program will attract both top notch research and teaching faculty and the very best students. Together, they will develop and complete research projects which will benefit the surrounding metropolitan and regional communities and fulfill the goal of strengthening the university's contributions to world-wide scholarly endeavors.

Moreover, the development of a Ph.D. program in Government should be considered as an indispensable component of the University of South Florida's strategic plan to join the ranks of the top 50 Research Universities in the U.S. and to position itself for membership in the American Association of Universities (AAU). Just about all of the top 50 Research Universities have a Ph.D. program in political science, international relations or public administration, the three areas housed under the Department of Government and International Affairs .

The proposed Ph.D. program in Government is distinct in two respects. First, the program is designed to establish an innovative focus on Public Affairs and Sustainable Political Communities in the age of globalization. Second, the program will allow students to integrate the canon of Political Science, International Studies and Public Administration knowledge with that from other disciplines (e.g., anthropology, economics, geography, history, and sociology) that contribute important research concerning how politics meets global challenges and contributes to human development.

The design of this program is entirely consistent with the University of South Florida's institutional mission as well as its current and past Strategic Plans. For example, university level strategic planning processes undertaken since 1992 have identified international education as an area for future academic growth. In 1993 the Faculty Senate and Provost adopted an innovative undergraduate general education curriculum. It required that all USF students develop competency in five dimensions of the liberal arts, one of which was an international perspective. This change followed from Shaping Our Future, a strategic planning document the faculty produced in 1992. Five years later, Provost Thomas Tighe initiated an evaluation and modification of the strategic directions established in 1992. In that same year, the Provost conducted a review of international programs and services at USF with the assistance of an external consultant and the faculty. A faculty advisory committee subsequently recommended the establishment of a centralized organizational structure to provide leadership and coordination of efforts to develop the international dimension of the university. Following a national search, a Dean of International Affairs was appointed in 1999.

USF 2000 reflected the updated strategic directions of the University. The revised plan identified "international affairs" as one of sixteen focal points for strategic planning. Addressing this area, the University recognized "that rapid globalization continues to transform virtually every professional field" and therefore "is committed to providing both students and faculty with the support they need to advance research through international collaboration; to suffuse the teaching and learning process with a global perspective; to address crucial global issues that threaten our economic, environmental, or political security through teaching research, and services; and to appreciate other cultures as well as our own and recognize how the creative contributions of all peoples enhance the quality of life."

The faculty in the Department of Government and International Affairs supported the establishment of the USF Globalization Research Center (GRC) in 2001 to address the fourth action priority under the "International Affairs" focal point in USF 2000: "develop research, teaching, and service partnerships with a variety of government offices, private business and industry, community organization, and alumni, both within the U.S. and abroad". We then began the planning process to propose this doctoral program which is guided by two key strategies in USF 2000. First, the doctoral program will meet the needs of business, industry, and the professions that depend on knowledge, skills, and attitudes needed in a global workforce. The track on "Public Affairs" is particularly suited to meet the workforce needs of those whose careers in both the public and private sectors require them to understand the institutions and functions that affect how politics meets global challenges. The track on "Sustainable Political Communities" track addresses a second key strategy in the plan: the preparation of doctoral students who intend to "collaborate with various communities on a global scale to address issues related to political stability, protection of the environment, and worldwide social, economic, and cultural growth."

The current USF internal Strategic Plan states that excellence in teaching and research are among the top missions of the university. Our proposed Ph.D. program can significantly contribute to the realization of these two goals. First, the program will strengthen the university's research, creative, and scholarly endeavors by establishing a doctoral program in Government that will provide a focal point for collaborative research among faculty currently at the university who are in a number of disciplines in the Health Sciences, Business Administration, Education, Engineering, and Arts and Sciences and who have a well-established research agenda in globalization issues related to their particular disciplines. Second, the program will promote the intellectual development of students by further diversifying the university's student-oriented environment. This program will draw from a competitive pool of prospective students from countries throughout the Western Hemisphere, including the United States, who are currently engaged in the development of governance processes that must respond to changing conditions brought about by globalization. For example, new governance skills and careers are required to meet public policy challenges brought on by the North American Free Trade Agreement, the pending Free Trade of the Americas Agreement, new threats to human security, environmental degradation and regulation, offshore outsourcing of labor, and new health care concerns and needs. This program will attract students from these countries, thereby diversifying the campus and community environment.

The Ph.D. program in Government is a perfect fit with the current USF strategic directions. First, the proposal recommends a doctoral program that will reinforce the emerging national and global reputation of the university's Patel Center for Global Solutions. In his keynote address for the conference on "Florida's Global Frontiers: Impacts of Trade Liberalization" that USF hosted in September 2004, world-renowned economist, Jagdish Bhagwati recognized USF "for rapidly becoming the leading [globalization] center for not just Florida, but it is being recognized everywhere. I am really impressed by the quality of the work and the range of work that is going on. I must congratulate all of you who are leading in this area." The program will also meet the strategy of providing high quality academic programs and support services. The current faculty strengths and immediate hiring plans demonstrate that the department and faculty from other disciplines who will be affiliated with the program have produced the scholarship and developed the teaching expertise necessary to ensure academic excellence. The program will also meet the third and fourth university strategies, an enrollment profile that reflects the educational goals of a major metropolitan research institution and serves as a national model for university engagement with local, national, and global communities. The program's curriculum and faculty hiring plans have been designed to address the growing importance of both human development and governance at all levels of society, from urban through global. For instance, research in the last ten years has established that cities/urban regions as well as international organizations have become critical players in wide range of governance issues related to human development (e.g., the global economy, global health problems, terrorism and other disruptions to human security, environment degradation). The curriculum will address the career goals of students who intend to work at various levels from the city/county through global institutions in either the public or private sectors.

B. Describe how the proposed program specifically relates to existing institutional strengths, such as programs of emphasis, other academic programs, and/or institutes and centers.

The Department of Government and International Affairs offers two undergraduate degrees (BA in Political Science, BA in International Studies); two masters degrees (MA in Political Science MPA in Public Administration); and four graduate certificates (Globalization Studies, Political Science, Non-Profit Management, and Public Management). These programs have been developed over several decades and the current doctoral proposal benefits from their track record as successful degree granting programs. In addition, the proposal has been designed to reflect programmatic research and teaching strengths currently in place at USF in a number of programs that include aspects of globalization. These include Anthropology, Architecture, Art, Economics, Environmental Science and Policy, Finance, Geography, Global Health, Information and Decision Sciences, Management, Marketing, Mass Communications, Religious Studies, Sociology, and Psychology. The graduate programs in Applied Anthropology (College of Arts and Sciences), Economics (College of Business Administration), Geography and Environmental Science and Policy (College of Arts and Sciences), and Global Health (College of Public Administration), include faculty and programmatic expertise that relate immediately to the programmatic emphasis in this proposal. Several of these programs already participate in the Graduate Certificate in Globalization Studies offered by the Department of Government and International Affairs.

A number of institutes and centers at USF also represent the institution's strengths in research related to the proposed doctoral program. First among these is the USF's Patel Center for Global Solutions. The Center has established a reputation as a leading research center whose strategic plan promotes USF research, in partnership with researchers throughout the state, the region, the nation, and the world, on globalization in three areas: development, the environment, and health. It also has established a signature research project on globalization and cities. It has a proven track record in support of USF faculty research through seed grants and support in the development of proposals for external public and private foundation funding. It also supports a "speaker series" that has brought over forty speakers to the campus and the community, and an "Occasional Papers in Globalization" series that publishes cutting edge research-in-progress. It has hosted public forums on a range of issues of interest to the university and local communities (e.g., security, tourism, and offshore outsourcing), and has also hosted a statewide conference on "Florida's Global Frontiers" and commissioned research on how globalization has impacted Florida's industries, labor/workforce development, environment, and public policy. It has established a number of research agreements and programs with various institutions and centers in Costa Rica, Mexico, Nicaragua, and the Dominican Republic for the purpose of advancing research of mutual interest to the contracting parties. Finally, it has supported the development of overseas studies programs and field schools for undergraduate and graduate students whose interests are related to globalization.

Three other Centers at USF provide critical resources that will support and strengthen the doctoral program in Government. They are the Center for Biological Defense, the Global Center for Disaster Management and Humanitarian Assistance, and the Center for International Business. These centers' affiliated faculties have expertise in human security, responses to natural and human-induced disasters, and the impact of globalization on international business. The faculty and students in the department will turn to this depth of expertise at USF but outside the department. This will allow doctoral research specialization to occur on the two tracks: public affairs and sustainable political communities.

Finally, the International Affairs Center, its Dean and staff, offer an essential level of administrative support that will facilitate the recruitment of international students to the doctoral program and the development of exchange opportunities for the USF faculty who will offer the program. The Center will also serve as a vital conduit in the identification of institutional expertise and resources for those administering and leading the program within the department.

It must be emphasized that our Ph.D. program is linked with two other proposed Ph.D. programs in History and Sociology at USF through the Global Sustainable Health Communities initiative. These three proposed Ph.D. programs, along with others already in existence, are designed to take maximum advantage of each other's expertise and resources to achieve excellence in both graduate education and research.

C. Provide a narrative of the planning process leading up to submission of this proposal. Include a chronology (table) of activities, listing both university personnel directly involved and external individuals who participated in planning. Provide a timetable of events necessary for the implementation of the proposed program.

The Department of Government and International Affairs has been considering the establishment of a Ph.D. program for more than a decade. In 1993, Professor Khator chaired a departmental Ph.D. committee and recommended the creation of a Ph.D. program in "Government and Public Affairs." Regrettably, the College lacked the resources to support the proposal. Five years later, in 1998, the Department once again voted unanimously to support a Ph.D. program in "Public and International Affairs." As the 1998 proposal was being reviewed by the College of Arts and Sciences, our Department began to explore the possibility of a joint Ph.D. program with the Political Science Department of the University of Central Florida in Orlando. Once the Department approved the new idea, a GIA exploratory committee met with the UCF exploratory committee to discuss details of a joint interdisciplinary Ph.D. program in "Public and International Policy." After extensive discussions, the two committees concluded that a combined Ph.D. program could be successfully implemented with the existing resources of the two departments and therefore would require minimal or no additional resources. The new proposal was then discussed and approved by both UCF's Political Science Department and by USF's Department of Government and International Affairs. Ultimately, however, it was decided not to move forward with the joint program.

The Department continued to work toward establishing a new Ph.D. program. Thus, another Ph.D. committee was formed and the Department decided to establish a cutting edge and innovative Ph.D. program in Political Science with a focus on globalization. When President Judy Genshaft visited our Department in 2002, she expressed strong support for our Ph.D. proposal. So did Provost Khator and Interim Dean Heide when they visited our Department.

With strong support from our President, Provost and Dean, and after much deliberation, our Department submitted a detailed proposal for a new Ph.D. program to Dean Heide in July 2003, a proposal that was unanimously approved by the faculty of the Department of Government and International Affairs. This proposal was eventually endorsed by the Graduate Council and Graduate School for advancement to the BOT and BOG.

Immediately after the approval of our Ph.D. proposal, the implementation phase of the new Ph.D. program will start.

CI. Time-Table for Implementation of New Ph.D. Program:

March-April 2007:	Preparation of linked degree program.
April 17-30 2007:	External Consultants Analysis and Review of the proposals.
May 2007:	Graduate Council Curriculum Committee reviews the proposal.
May 2007:	The reports by the external consultants are due.
June 2007:	Submission of our proposal to the Graduate Council.

August 2007:	Consideration by BOT/ACE workgroup
September 2007:	Consideration by Board of Trustees
December 2007:	Consideration by Board of Governors
Fall 2008:	A New Ph.D. program in Government begins.

As soon as the Board of Governors approves our Ph.D. program, GIA will:

- commence regional, national, and international advertisements of the new program;
- appoint a new director for managing the new Ph.D. program;
- begin active recruitment of Ph.D. students, including students enrolled in our own MA in Political Science and MPA; we believe we can begin to recruit students a few months after the approval date;
- submit new graduate courses for approval.

Planning Process

Date	Participants	Planning Activity
1993-2007	Department, College, USF faculty and admin	Program development and curriculum framework
2007	Graduate Council, BOT	Review and approval

Events Leading to Implementation

Spring 2008	Student recruitment, faculty searches
Fall 2008	Program start

VII. Program Quality Indicators - Reviews and Accreditation

Identify program reviews, accreditation visits, or internal reviews for any university degree programs related to the proposed program, especially any within the same academic unit. List all recommendations and summarize the institution's progress in implementing the recommendations.

The MPA program, which is part of the Department of Government and International Affairs, was thoroughly reviewed by the National Association of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration (NASPAA) in 2003. It has been granted accreditation for seven years. After a thorough evaluation by an independent review committee designated by NASPAA, our program was found in conformity with NASPAA's national standards. The evaluation process was comprehensive and included a review of the curriculum, the quality of instruction, the quality of students, the progress of our graduates in the pursuit of their career goals, diversity among students, response to community needs, and community support for the MPA Program.

In January 2005, the Department completed a self-study of its Political Science and International Studies programs, both at the undergraduate and graduate levels. One distinguished and nationally recognized scholar conducted an independent assessment of our graduate and undergraduate programs in 2006. His assessment of the Department was very positive, and he fully supported our Ph.D. proposal.

VIII. Curriculum

A. Describe the specific expected student learning outcomes associated with the proposed program. If a bachelor's degree program, include a web link to the Academic Learning Compact or include the document itself as an appendix.

Learning Outcomes:

Upon completion of the Ph.D. program in Government, graduates will be able to:

1) Engage in scholarly and policy oriented research to advance knowledge of world politics, international relations, and public administration.

2) Assume leadership positions in government at the international, national, state, or local levels.

3) Assume leadership positions in private sector companies that conduct international business.

4) Become skilled instructors and researchers as faculty members in graduate and undergraduate political science, public administration, or international studies programs.

B. Describe the admission standards and graduation requirements for the program.

Admission Requirements:

Students apply for admission directly into the Ph.D. program. A committee of GIA faculty members evaluates the applications and makes its recommendation to the department chair. Those who are interested in first earning a Masters in Political Science or a Masters in Public Administration need to apply to those programs separately.

Students must submit a completed application, 2 official transcripts from their undergraduate or graduate institutions, official GRE Scores, 3 letters of recommendation (from academic sources or from those able to judge the applicant's academic abilities), and a 500 word personal statement expressing reasons for pursuing a Ph.D. in Government at the University of South Florida.

At a minimum, students must have either a 3.3 or 1100 combined verbal and quantitative GRE score to be admitted.

A Masters degree in Political Science, Public Administration, International Studies, or a related field will count favorably towards admission, but it is not a requirement for admission.

Graduation Requirements:

In addition to the course work hours described below, students must also complete the following to earn a Ph.D.

1) All students must pass two written comprehensive examinations. The first exam tests students in the general areas of political science and international studies, and the second exam tests students on their chosen track. Both exams must be taken on the same day. A rotating committee of faculty members composes and grades those exams.

The comprehensive examinations for the Ph.D. program are separate from the comprehensive examinations for the MA in Political Science program. Students may not substitute comprehensive examinations taken to fulfill a Masters degree for their Ph.D. comprehensive exams.

2) All students must demonstrate competency in at least one foreign language. Students must pass the competency exam administrated by the World Language Education Department. Additionally, students, whose research focuses on a particular area of the world, must be proficient in language(s) native to that region.

3) Students must present their dissertation proposal in written and oral form to their dissertation committee. Dissertation committees must consist of four members from the Department of Government & International Affairs, one of whom is the student's major dissertation advisor. Students must also select a professor from outside the department. After passing this oral defense, students begin writing their dissertation. Students must present their dissertation at an oral defense, and their committees determine whether the students passed. Finally, students must submit to the Department written copies of their dissertations with the signatures of their committee members. All dissertations must conform to University of South Florida format rules.

C. Describe the curricular framework for the proposed program, including number of credit hours and composition of required core courses, restricted electives, unrestricted electives, thesis requirements, and dissertation requirements. Identify the total numbers of semester credit hours for the degree.

This Ph.D. in Government offered by the Department of Government and International Affairs is designed based on an integrated series of graduate courses that comprise a multidisciplinary study of the economic, social, cultural, ideological, and environmental dimensions of government as reflected in two tracks offered within the proposal: Public Affairs and Sustainable Political Communities. The curriculum in this Ph.D. program is also intended to train students to be generalists in Political Science, International Studies, and Public Administration.

All students must complete the Interdisciplinary Professional Seminar or Proseminar, which they may share with others in this integrated set of degree programs. In addition, all students, including those for either of the two tracks and those who hold a graduate degree in Political Science, International Studies or Public Administration, are required to complete the following: 9-credit hour core requirement for all students, 9-credit hour core elective requirement, 12-credit hour multi-disciplinary elective requirement, 6-credit hour Dissertation Research Proposal Preparation requirement, and 18-hour dissertation requirement.

Students admitted with a Bachelors degree will be required to take all the courses that are required for a MA in Political Science or MPA (Public Administration). They will not be required to write a separate Master's thesis.

Students admitted with a Masters in Political Science or Masters in Public Administration from the University of South Florida can transfer their 30 hours of course work, but they are still required to take their required track courses, if they have not already done so.

Students with graduate work completed in other departments at USF, or in any field at another accredited university, may transfer no more than 8 graduate level credit hours towards the completion of this doctoral program. Transfer credits must have been completed with a grade of "B" or better. All transfer credits must be approved by the Graduate Program Coordinator. Core courses and required track courses cannot be transferred.

D. Provide a sequenced course of study for all majors, concentrations, or areas of emphasis within the proposed program.

The 57 credit hour (minimum) post-M.A. program is as follows:

Interdisciplinary Professional Seminar 3 hours

Doctoral students in Government will complete a 3-hour interdisciplinary professional seminar taught by an interdisciplinary team of faculty members from the three participating departments. The goal of the seminar involves building a team of students from a variety of disciplines that will imagine how sustainable communities might be promoted and developed. The class will study political examples and develop theoretical models before attempting to formulate practical policies aimed at establishing and shaping real communities. These issues will be addressed in a multidisciplinary environment of inquiry where communication skills across disciplines are promoted. The goal of the capstone seminar is to demonstrate how innovative strategies informed by multiple disciplines can produce communities that are environmentally sound, economically prosperous, and socially equitable.

Disciplinary Core Requirements (9 hours required):

INR 5012 Globalization	3 hours
PAD 6041 Ethics in Public Service	3 hours
POT 6007 Theories of Governance (minor changes required)	3 hours

Track 1: Public Affairs

Disciplinary Sub-Areas: 9 hours required:

HIS XXXX Rural Culture of the American South	3 hours
HIS XXXX Gender and Sexuality in US History	3 hours

Sociology

SYD 6605 Community Analysis	3 hours
SYD 6605 City and Community	3 hours
SYD 6706 Race and Ethnicity
3 hours

[Note: additional courses from various disciplines will be added as they are developed and implemented]

Disciplinary Dissertation Research Proposal Preparation	6 hours
Dissertation	18 hours

The process of writing a dissertation begins in the seminar experience through one-on-one mentoring between professor and student. Students will be guided through the process of identifying research topics, selecting appropriate sources and analyzing those sources in light of relevant theories and models of analysis in both historical and other disciplines. The final product of each seminar will be a research paper, produced in accordance with generally accepted standards for publication within the discipline. The dissertation represents the culmination of the research experience for Government doctoral students and will involve the creation of an original book-length study with many interrelated parts. Typically a team of three or more professors under the direction of one major professor supervise the research and writing of the dissertation. It is expected that faculty members from the linked degree programs will serve on Government doctoral committees. Interdisciplinary topics are strongly encouraged.

Total Credit Hours (beyond the M.A.)	57 hours

E. Provide a one- or two-sentence description of each required or elective course.

Descriptions for Core Courses

CPO 6091 Seminar in Comparative Politics: This seminar provides an extensive, comprehensive overview of the major theories and approaches used in the study of Comparative Politics.

INR 5012 Globalization Seminar: This course provides an examination of globalization's impact on international relations, including literature from political science, anthropology, geography, sociology, and economics that impacts the study of the nation-state system and power.

INR 6007 Seminar in International Relations: This seminar provides an overview of the advanced study of international relations, including survey of basic literature, analysis of numerous theoretical and methodological approaches, and investigation of major issues.

INR 6036 International Political Economy: This seminar provides an advanced study of the development and politics of the international economic system, focusing on theoretical and empirical analysis of cooperation and conflict in trade, aid, and investment relationships.

INR 6107 Seminar in American Foreign Policy: This seminar examines the theoretical and methodological issues involved in the formulation and execution of foreign policy and other international problems confronting the United States.

INR 6690 Research Methods in Globalization: This seminar examines and presents interdisciplinary research, which address a wide-range of issues related to globalization, including those that concern governance and human development.

PAD 5836 Comparative Public Administration: This seminar analyzes how organizations and managers perform within a particular environment, the potential impact of innovation, and how service is accomplished in a variety of socio-economic environments.

PAD 6060 Public Administration Theory and Practice: This seminar provides an overview of the examination of major theoretical and practical developments in public administration with focus on organization theory and current research trends in the field.

POS 6735 Foundations of Political Inquiry: This seminar provides an overview of the survey of philosophical, intellectual, and theoretical issues, emphasizing the critical analysis of historical development of political science.

POS 6736 Political Research Methods: This seminar provides an introductory survey of empirical research methodology, research design, sampling techniques, univariate, bivariate, and multivariate statistics, and computer data analysis.

Descriptions for Global Governance Courses

CPO 59xx Area Studies in Comparative Politics (new course): This seminar analyzes government and politics in particular regions of the world, including Europe, the former Soviet Union, Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Latin America. Note that this course will be separated from special topics courses in comparative politics that do not focus on area studies.

INR 6xxx International Law and Organizations (new course): This seminar examines essential components of the international legal system and international institutions (e.g., the United Nations), with emphasis on recognition, succession, sea, air and space law, treaties, diplomats, International Court of Justice; laws of war, etc.

PAD 6xxx Budgeting and International Finance (new course): This course analyzes the fiscal organization, development, authorization, execution, and assessment of international government budgets.

POS 6045 Seminar in American National Government: This seminar provides an overview of the advanced study of selected topics of institutions, processes, and behaviors in American national government and politics.

Descriptions for Human Development Courses

CPO 6036 Politics of Developing Areas: This seminar examines the advanced study of ideologies, politics, political institutions, and the socio-economic conditions that influence them in developing nations.

CPO 6xxx Democratization (new course): This course seminar examines the methodologies and issues facing the study of nations moving towards democracy.

CPO 6xxx Comparative Environmental Politics (new course): This seminar examines the politics of environmental issues, formation and implementation of environmental policy from the perspective of different nations, regions, and climates.

INR 6xxx Peace and Conflict Studies (new course): This seminar examines the causes of war and studies the various methods by which those conflicts are ended.

Descriptions for Electives

CPO 5934 Special Topics in Comparative Politics: These courses focus on specific substantive areas in comparative politics that are not covered in other courses. Note that this course will be severed from the special topics course that focuses on area studies.

INR 5086 Issues in International Relations: This special topics seminar explores different topics in international relations and provides students with an opportunity for in-depth study of historical and contemporary problems in international politics.

PAD 5605 Administrative Law and Regulation: This course examines the constitutional and statutory base and limitations of the administrative process, administrative adjudication, rule-making, and the judicial review of such actions.

PAD 5807 Urban and Local Government Administration: This course analyzes the role of the administrator at the municipal level, the division of functions, policy formation, alternative governmental structures, and effects on the administrative process.

PAD 6041 Ethics and Public Service: The purpose of this course is to provide students with an understanding of the ethical dimensions of public service, with particular attention focused on the role, duties and responsibilities of the public administrator.

PAD 6146 Non Profit Management and Leadership: This course examines the role and importance of third sector organizations in American society, unique problems in non-profit administration, and the role of leadership in non-profit organizations.

PAD 6208 Financial Oversight for Non-Profit Organizations: This course introduces the non-financial manager to financial information used to make decisions for non-profit organization, focusing specifically on financial management, budgeting, and economic analysis.

PAD 6231 Resources Development, Fund Raising and Grantsmanship: This course examines the principles, skills, methods, and techniques necessary for successful fundraising and grant application.

PAD 6275 Political Economy for Public Managers: This seminar introduces students to the fundamental concepts, theories, principles and tools used in public sector managerial economics.

PAD 6307 Policy Analysis, Implementation, and Program Evaluation: This seminar introduces students to the analysis of public problems and program development, with emphasis on the methodological tools for analyzing public problems, and criteria to assess the value of programs in addressing public problems.

PAD 6335 Strategic Planning for Public and Non-Profit Organizations: This class emphasizes methods of strategic planning as tools to lead, strengthen, and develop public and nonprofit organizations.

PAD 6336 Community Development Program and Strategies: This seminar discusses community development principles and practices in historical and contemporary perspectives of community development.

PAD 6417 Human Resources Management: This course studies the major functions in public personnel, including recruiting, selection, testing, training, and development, and employee and human relations in the public service.

PAD 6710 Public Information Management: This course examines policy issues related to managers' role with strategic technical planning, process re-engineering, application development, data administration, procurement, security, public access, and the internet.

POS 5094 Issues in American National and State Government: This class focuses on special topic in American politics and government.

POS 6127 Issues in State Government: This course offers an advanced study of selected topics in institutions, processes, and behavior of American state governments and Florida government.

POS 6157 Seminar in Urban Politics: This seminar analyzes the literature with emphasis on urban political behavior, development of various theories, and propositions regarding governmental structure and the formation and implementation of public policy.

POS 6415 The American Presidency: This seminar analyzes problems and powers of the presidency with emphasis on crisis management, staffing, legislative leadership, and decision making.

POS 6427 The Legislative Process: This seminar analyzes formal and informal decision-making processes in legislative bodies, with emphasis on U.S. House of Representatives and U.S. Senate.

POS 6455 Political Parties and Interest Groups: This seminar examines statutes, functions, and characteristics of political parties and interest groups, as well as their interactions with political processes, actors, and institutions.

POS 6607 Constitutional Law: This course offers an advanced study of legal, political, philosophic, and methodological problems in constitutional law.

POS 6698 Seminar in Law and Politics: This course offers an advanced study of institutions and processes in the field of law and politics.

POS 6909: Independent Study: Specialized independent study determined by the student's needs and interests.

POS 7xxx: Directed Reading: Independent research project conducted by the student under supervision of a professor in the department.

POS 7xxxx Advanced Quantitative Methods (new course): This study introduces students to sophisticated statistical techniques relevant to political science and international studies, such as regression diagnostics, non-linear regression, interaction effects, factor analysis, causal modeling, and time series analysis.

POS 7xxxx Doctoral Seminar (new course): Intensive small-group discussion as well as shared and individual guided research for students who are at the dissertation writing stage.

POT 6007 Seminar in Political Theory: This class provides students who are capable of independent work with the opportunity to explore advanced problems of political theory.

PUP 5607 Public Policy and Health Care: The seminar studies health care policy as it relates to the policy process.

PUP 6007 Seminar in Public Policy: This seminar examines public policy from a theoretical and practical decision.

URP 6056 City and Regional Planning: This seminar reviews goals, objectives, and interrelationships between regional and city planning; intergovernmental and policy issues.

F. For degree programs in the science and technology disciplines, discuss how industry-driven competencies were identified and incorporated into the curriculum and identify if any industry advisory council exists to provide input for curriculum development and student assessment.

G. For all programs, list the specialized accreditation agencies and learned societies that would be concerned with the proposed program. Will the university seek accreditation for the program if it is available? If not, why? Provide a brief timeline for seeking accreditation, if appropriate.

The University of South Florida is accredited by the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS). No agency or organization currently accredits doctoral programs in Political Science/Government.

H. For doctoral programs, list the accreditation agencies and learned societies that would be concerned with corresponding bachelor's or master's programs associated with the proposed program. Are the programs accredited? If not, why?

The University of South Florida is accredited by the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS). No agency or organization currently accredits bachelor's and master's programs in Political Science/Government. The Master of Public Administration Program (MPA) is accredited by the National Association of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration (NASPAA).

I. Briefly describe the anticipated delivery system for the proposed program (e.g., traditional delivery on main campus; traditional delivery at branch campuses or centers; or nontraditional delivery such as distance or distributed learning, self-paced instruction, or external degree programs). If the proposed delivery system will require specialized services or greater than normal financial support, include projected costs in Table 2. Provide a narrative describing the feasibility of delivering the proposed program through collaboration with other universities, both public and private. Cite specific queries made of other institutions with respect to shared courses, distance/distributed learning technologies, and joint-use facilities for research or internships.

For the time being most of our classes will be delivered primarily on the Tampa Campus in the traditional style. We have no plans to establish a complete distance learning program. However, many Public Administration courses, which are part of our department and this Ph.D. program, are offered at the USF Downtown Center, and some courses have been delivered through distance learning.

IX. Faculty Participation

A. Use Table 4 to identify existing and anticipated ranked (not visiting or adjunct) faculty who will participate in the proposed program through Year 5. Include (a) faculty code associated with the source of funding for the position; (b) name; (c) highest degree held; (d) academic discipline or specialization; (e) contract status (tenure, tenure-earning, or multi-year annual [MYA]); (f) contract length in months; and (g) percent of annual effort that will be directed toward the proposed program (instruction, advising, supervising internships and practica, and supervising thesis or dissertation hours).

See Table 4.

B. Use Table 2 to display the costs and associated funding resources for existing and anticipated ranked faculty (as identified in Table 2). Costs for visiting and adjunct faculty should be included in the category of Other Personnel Services (OPS). Provide a narrative summarizing projected costs and funding sources.

See Table 2.

C. Provide the number of master's theses and/or doctoral dissertations directed, and the number and type of professional publications for each existing faculty member (do not include information for visiting or adjunct faculty).

Faculty Name	Theses	Dissertations	Professional Publications

See attachment 2.

D. Provide evidence that the academic unit(s) associated with this new degree have been productive in teaching, research, and service. Such evidence may include trends over time for average course load, FTE productivity, student HC in major or service courses, degrees granted, external funding attracted, as well as qualitative indicators of excellence.

The Department conducted a comparison study to assess research productivity (see attachment 1). There are no Ph.D. programs that offer a degree in Government with two tracks on Public Affairs and Sustainable Political Communities that focus on Globalization. There are three institutions in the United States that offer both a Ph.D. in political science and another Ph.D. in globalization-related topics: Rutgers – the State University of New Jersey; University of California/Santa Barbara; and State University of New York at Buffalo. There is one other Ph.D. in the United States with a focus on Globalization. It is offered as a doctorate in Anthropology at Southern Methodist University in Dallas-Ft. Worth, Texas. We chose to compare our proposal to those in New Jersey, California, and New York because there is NRC and NSF data on their Ph.D. programs in Political Science and because each of them has another Ph.D. that is somewhat related to our proposal.

We compared the most recent NRC data (1995) to the most recent departmental data (2003). With regard to the definition of percentage of faculty with publications, we included both refereed journal articles and books published in 2003. We included books published because such publications are widely viewed and commonly used within the field of political science as a medium for the dissemination of new research findings and new perspectives on various topics within the discipline. The number of faculty in 2003 (22.5) differs from the number of faculty in 2004 (22 as noted in Table One) due to retirements at the end of 2003 and new hires beginning in Fall 2004.

The following tables provide quantitative date on productivity indicators of the Department of Government and International Affairs. Included with this section are the Curriculum Vitae of faculty in order to document research and grants productivity.

X. Non-Faculty Resources

A. Describe library resources currently available to implement and/or sustain the proposed program through Year 5. Provide the total number of volumes and serials available in this discipline and related fields. List major journals that are available to the university's students. Include a signed statement from the Library Director that this subsection and subsection B have been reviewed and approved for all doctoral level proposals.

1. Library volumes (Provide the total number of volumes available in this discipline and related fields.)

We searched for library volumes related to three keywords in the field of political science:

Government – 78, 321
Politics – 62,343
Political Science – 8,494

We then narrowed the search for those holdings that were specific to the focus of the doctoral proposal. As of May 2004, the USF library holdings include over 17,100 volumes based only on a keyword search using the following terms related to the doctoral proposal:

Globalization 860

The USF Library receives U.S. government publications through the Federal Depository Library Program. The Library maintains a research level collection, which includes the Congressional Record, Congressional Hearings, House and Senate Reports, and House and Senate Documents. The collection contains historical and current resources and all of these materials are primary research resources.

In addition, the Library receives public documents from the State of Florida. The collection of Florida Documents covers state agency reports from 1967 to present. The Library has a complete collection of the laws of Florida and also retains the House and Senate Journals of Florida.

The Library has a collection of United Nations Documents that contain reports from all agencies of the United Nations. In addition, we have a wide range of statistical materials and research reports, which will be of interest to those conducting research on international (e.g., United Nations and related agencies, World Bank, International Monetary Fund) and regional (e.g., European Union, Organization of American States, North American Free Trade Agreement) organizations.

The Library also offers a wide range of relevant electronic research resources, both primary and secondary. Furthermore, since 2002 the USF Globalization Research Center has developed a Globalization Portal (GP) pilot project, the purpose of which is to begin organizing web-based globalization research resources. The pilot project has been submitted to the National Science Foundation and to the Institutes of Museums and Library Sciences for funding. While funding has yet to be secured, the pilot GP will eventually be launched and assist researchers and students, including those involved in the doctoral program, in accessing internet research resources that are now only available as a gigantic yet unorganized electronic data base.

Finally, the GRC has established a special collections library in its office. It has acquired approximately 200 secondary and some primary source materials that relate to a variety of globalization-related topics. These library resources will continue to be developed and are available for faculty and student use.

2. Serials (Provide the total number available in this discipline and related fields, and list those major journals which are available at your institution.)

The USF library subscribes to the major journals in the field of political science that are published in the United States. The library holdings of these journals are:

American Political Science Review	vol. 1 (1907/1907) – present (some missing) on JSTOR and electronic version
Social Science Quarterly	vol. 49 (1968) – present - electronic version
Journal of Politics	vol. 1 (1939) – present - electronic version
Polity	vol. 1. (1968/1969- present
American Politics Quarterly	vol. 1 (1945) – present - electronic version

Midwest Journal of Political Science vol. 1 (1957)-vol. 16 (1972), title changes to:

American Journal of Political Science vol. 17 (1973) – present - electronic version

Western Political Quarterly vol. 1 (1948)-vol. 45 (1992), titled changed to:

Political Research Quarterly vol. 46 (193) – present electronic version

The library has similar holdings of political science and social science journals that are published by political science and related associations in several other countries throughout the world. The library also has holdings of journals from other disciplines (e.g., anthropology, geography, sociology, economics, mass communications, management, marketing, psychology) that publish research relevant for the study of political science and globalization related topics.

Finally, the Library subscribes to over 140 journals that regularly publish research related to globalization. Arranged by journal title, these are:

C. Describe classroom, teaching laboratory, research laboratory, office, and other types of space that are necessary and currently available to implement the proposed program through Year 5.

The Department of Government and International Affairs (GIA) is located in the Social Science Building at USF. It occupies one-half of the third floor of that building. It has access to classroom space that is located on three floors of the building and to an open use computer lab on the second floor of the building. The offices of the Patel Center/Globalization Research Center are conveniently located on the first floor of the same building and provide immediate access to resources held there and of use for faculty and students in the proposed doctoral program.

All of the equipment anticipated for use in this program exists with the department that is proposing the program.

D. Describe additional classroom, teaching laboratory, research laboratory, office, and other space needed to implement and/or maintain the proposed program through Year 5. Include any projected Instruction and Research (I&R) costs of additional space in Table 2. Do not include costs for new construction because that information should be provided in response to X (J) below.

No additional resources are needed.

E. Describe specialized equipment that is currently available to implement the proposed program through Year 5. Focus primarily on instructional and research requirements.

NA

F. Describe additional specialized equipment that will be needed to implement and/or sustain the proposed program through Year 5. Include projected costs of additional equipment in Table 2.

NA

G. Describe any additional special categories of resources needed to implement the program through Year 5 (access to proprietary research facilities, specialized services, extended travel, etc.). Include projected costs of special resources in Table 2.

NA

H. Describe fellowships, scholarships, and graduate assistantships to be allocated to the proposed program through Year 5. Include the projected costs in Table 2.

The department currently has six graduate assistants, each of whom is given a nine-month appointment for $8,229 plus a partial tuition waiver. The total current graduate assistant budget for the department is $51,500. The department has no fellowships or scholarship funds for graduate students.

I. Describe currently available sites for internship and practicum experiences, if appropriate to the program. Describe plans to seek additional sites in Years 1 through 5.

NA

J. If a new capital expenditure for instructional or research space is required, indicate where this item appears on the university's fixed capital outlay priority list. Table 2 includes only Instruction and Research (I&R) costs. If non-I&R costs, such as indirect costs affecting libraries and student services, are expected to increase as a result of the program, describe and estimate those expenses in narrative form below. It is expected that high enrollment programs in particular would necessitate increased costs in non-I&R activities.

PEER COMPARISON DATA

Select at least three peer programs, two of which must be outside Florida, offering the proposed Ph.D. In identifying peers select programs in the same or similar field which are comparable to yours, perhaps located in institutions with missions analogous to yours, except that they already offer a Ph.D. Specify your criteria for selecting the peers. Utilizing data from the National Research Council (NRC) and National Science Foundation (NSF), provide comparative data for the department that will house the new program or core faculty who will participate in the new program, and comparative data for the projected student headcount. If the discipline proposed is not included in these sources, obtain comparable data from other sources. Universities may choose to provide additional data comparisons that are not available from NRC or NSF, such as percent of graduate students supported by contracts and grants, and total contracts and grants for the most recent year.

DEFINITIONS

Total Faculty: Total headcount of ranked faculty (professor, associate or assistant professor) participating in the program; full-time or part-time.

% Supported: Percentage of Total Program Faculty with external research support. If not using NRC data, specify time period and sources. For visual and performing arts faculty, include any external grants, commissions, and performance fees.

% with Publications: Percentage of Total Program Faculty publishing refereed journal articles. If not using NRC data specify time period. If this is a discipline in which books, music or other creative activity are a more important indicator of scholarly activity, you may include them, but justify doing so.

Publications/Faculty: The ratio of the total number of program publications to the number of Total Program Faculty. If not using NRC data, specify time period.

Total Students: The number of full and part-time graduate students enrolled. For the proposed program list projected headcount in the fifth year. Specify the year for peer data.

R&D Expenditures: Separately budgeted R&D current fund expenditures designed to produce specific research outcomes and either funded by an agency external to an academic institution or separately budgeted by an internal unit of the institution.

Summary Report on Program Review of Political Science/International Affairs
2004/5

External Reviewer: Farhad Kazemi, Professor, Department of Politics, New York University

Date of Site Visit: April 7-8, 2005

Programs: Bachelor of Arts in Political Science
Bachelor of Arts in International Affairs
Master of Arts in Political Science
Master of Arts in International Affairs

Actions taken in response to previous program review recommendations

Not documented by department.

Academic Learning Compact

In process.

Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities and Threats

Strengths

- The Department is reasonably health and quite functional. The Chair has successfully managed tensions and maintained largely harmonious relations among the faculty.
- Both graduate and undergraduate students are happy with their programs and with the faculty.
- The professional Undergraduate Advisor is a highly valued and effective addition to the department.

Challenges

- The placement of the professional Master of Public Administration within the Department is somewhat unusual and has resulted in some tension.
- The Department is in a state of transition towards a research rather than a teaching focus, consistent with the University's evolution.
- Teaching loads are very heavy.
- Research productivity varies significantly across the faculty.
- There is a significant gender imbalance on the faculty.

Recommendations based on review findings

1. The current departmental configuration, while a source of some tension, should be retained.
2. The department should recruit at least one junior faculty member with methodological competence and substantive knowledge of the discipline.
3. The current faculty gender imbalance should be addressed in future recruitment—there is no shortage of qualified junior and senior female faculty members in the discipline.
4. The department should be opportunistic in taking advantage of hires in related disciplines and units, including joint appointments.
5. The curriculum should be reviewed with a view to more systematic gradation of courses and prerequisites, and the addition of advanced courses and seminars.
6. The Undergraduate Advisor could benefit from additional support.

External Review and Site Visit
Department of Government and International Affairs
University of South Florida
Tampa, FL
Farhad Kazemi, Professor of Politics, New York University
April 27, 2005

Purpose

As part of the mandated external review requirements, I was asked to assist the University of South Florida in a formal review of the Department of Government and International Affairs (GIA). In preparation for the site visit, a large number of documents and relevant material were sent to me for review. These included the following:

1. The GIA's extensive "Academic Program Review and Self Study" prepared by the Department Chair, Dr. Mohsen Milani, submitted in January 2005.
2. The NASPAA Self Study Report of the Master of Public Administration and the subsequent review report of 7/31/02.
3. A complete file of all curriculum vitae of GIA faculty.
4. Dean Bruce J. Cochrane's "Dean's Review" of the GIA's self Study and other reports.
5. Miscellaneous material on advising, programs, web pages, student activities, public lectures, staffing, and external reviewer's schedule of meetings and other relevant items.

These sets of material were unusually helpful in preparing the external reviewer for the site visit. During the three-day site visit (April 6-8, 2005), I met with high-level university officers (from the Dean and Provost offices), individually with most of the full-time faculty, a select group of both undergraduate and graduate students, the undergraduate advisor, the MA advisor, the full-time departmental staff, and the chair. The meetings were cordial and highly informative. It is my distinct belief that I have a reasonably thorough knowledge and understanding of GIA's operations, goals, and directions within the larger framework of the University of South Florida.

Summary Recommendations

 In conformity with the important quality changes that are currently taking place at the USF, GIA is also in a process of transition on a trajectory of progress and higher quality. It is critical that this important unit does not miss the boat and become only a service department.

 The current departmental configuration, known as Government and International Affairs, with its three constituent parts --public administration, government, and international affairs-- should be kept in its current form.

 There are important differences among the full-time faculty in regard to their research productivity, professional visibility, and scholarly achievement. Some of these differences will diminish with departures and retirements. There is, however, a special need for recruitment of at least one additional quality junior faculty member with methodological competence and substantive knowledge of the discipline.

 The Department's gender imbalance needs to be addressed in future recruitment, especially since the profession as a whole (and the discipline of political science in particular) includes a substantial number of well-qualified junior and senior female faculty members.

 The Department should be encouraged to continue to be "opportunistic" in its hiring strategies and encouraged to take full advantage of hiring in cognate disciplines, areas, and other schools of the University. A proper "opportunistic" approach must primarily be in the area of the Department's special needs. It should not, however, be restricted to joint appointments, but should also take advantage of new programs and developments at USF that help its upward movement.

 The GIA curriculum is reasonably wide and extensive in its coverage of fields, subfields, and regions. There is, however, a need for more systematic gradation of courses and their prerequisites, additional advance-level courses, and seminars as part of the Department's regular curriculum than is currently the case. The unusually high student to faculty ratio of 54 to 1 creates a structural barrier to this option. Perhaps the curriculum could be rearranged with a few large introductory courses and several advanced courses and seminars, as is the case with most large institutions

 The proposed Ph.D program in Globalization is promising and can be achieved with proper faculty hiring and some resource reallocation and redirection.

 Both graduate and undergraduate students seem to be happy and content with the faculty and the Department. The current Undergraduate Advisor's role is highly valued by all students. His one-person operation can benefit from additional support. The departmental staff shares the students' positive attitude towards the faculty.

General Observations

It is important to note at the outset that as an academic unit the Department is reasonably healthy and quite functional. It is to the Department Chair's distinct credit for having successfully managed potential tensions and for having kept the faculty relationship largely harmonious.

Although the particular configuration of GIA's three constituent parts -- public administration, government, and international affairs – is somewhat unusual, this arrangement is not unheard of in the discipline. The major discontinuity, if any, concerns the relationship between public administration (PA) and the other two divisions of the Department. As expected, some of the faculty complaints and tensions concern precisely PA's place and role in the department. The fact that PA is a purely graduate program with a public policy thrust tends to occasionally fuel divisiveness. One or two faculty members charge that PA has traditionally received more faculty lines and greater share of scarce resources than other divisions. An additional two mention that PA program's focus is less theoretical and more applied. Although the latter point is probably accurate, it is also the nature of the field of public administration to devote a substantial portion of its teaching and resources to applied problems. I doubt if USF's PA program should be singled out for this alleged deficiency any more than other similar programs in the country. As far as the claim that PA has received the lion's share of faculty lines and resources, the evidence at hand does not support it. The numbers of PA's faculty lines have not increased over time. Neither was I able to find any clear substantiation that significant redirection of resources has gone to PA.

In my view, some of these "tensions" can be reduced with an attempt to encourage the GIA's faculty to learn more about each other's research and scholarly activities. I recommend strongly that bi-weekly or monthly brown bag luncheon sessions be organized that would allow faculty members from all GIA divisions to present their research to colleagues and students in an informal and supportive environment. Interactions of this or other sorts will go a long way to melt down some of the perceived or real barriers, enhance the Department's intellectual milieu, and increase the sense of community. I recommended this matter to the Chair during the site visit. It is my impression that it has already been implemented.

The Department, as in other parts of the University, is in a state of transition. This appears to be an upward trajectory that corresponds with the USF agenda and the stated goal of making it one of the top fifty public institutions in the nation. At least on the basis of the junior faculty hiring of the recent years and the faculty's research record and professional visibility, the moves are in the right direction. The upward move is somewhat handicapped by the 54 to 1 ratio of students to faculty. Without additional major recruitment, this problem will become exacerbated with unhealthy consequences. There is a dire need for faculty members who can teach different aspects of American politics which is, in many respects, the bread and butter teaching field for the Department's large undergraduate majors and the University's general education curriculum. There is apparently a consensus within the Department that the hiring of an additional Americanist is a priority. As already recommended, the Department should seriously consider offering a limited set of large introductory courses with the help of teaching assistants, then put a good bit of its teaching resources into upper-level courses and seminars.

The GIA faculty has a mixed record in regard to productivity and professional visibility and achievement. The variation in quality is at times substantial even though it is, as a whole, a reasonably well-functioning faculty group. There is a general need for the faculty to publish in greater numbers in disciplinary journals, be appointed to editorial boards of academic periodicals, and become much more active in grant applications than is currently the case. Although some of the faculty members are involved in these scholarly activities, others are not. A clearly instituted system of rewards and benefits for teaching, research, and service (and especially for research) will go a long way to encourage increased productivity of this sort. In the long run, improvements along these lines will have to come from proper hiring of the best trained available junior faculty. To repeat a truism, the future of GIA will be largely decided by its current junior faculty and future hiring.

It is my understanding that both the Department and the University have made major efforts to hire qualified female members of the faculty. Although this effort is laudable, there is a pressing need to pay some attention to the gender imbalance in the GIA. The Department's recruitment agenda should make an aggressive effort to attract as applicants (and if qualified, as colleagues) female teacher/scholars. Given the fact that the pool of female political scientists is large and the quality high, this effort should bear fruit in due time.

As described above, both graduate and undergraduate students are very pleased with the GIA's curriculum and the general quality of teaching. The students' accolades even extend to the part-time faculty and adjuncts. Although the current curriculum offers a wide and extensive selection of courses, there are needs for curricular and content distinction between introductory and advanced courses. Moreover, more advanced or senior seminars need to be offered. Some of the students also requested that the GIA offer more courses with field research components. Although such courses do in fact exist and are viewed to be of great value to the students, there is a request to expand these types of offerings. In addition, there was a call for the greater availability of supervised internships in various arms of both state and federal governments and in the private sector.

I would like to state for the record that my meeting with the departmental staff was productive. They similarly extended positive views towards the faculty and students.

A relevant additional issue is the Department's proposal for a PhD program in Globalization. Although I support this request and think that it can be done successfully, I repeat that appropriate faculty recruitment will, by definition, play a major role in the success or failure or the proposed program. This should include scholars with substantive knowledge of comparative and international politics, political economy, American business and politics and the like. It would be highly desirable that at least one or more of these new colleagues have additional expertise in methodology. This is important since GIA does not have a sufficient number of faculty members well versed in cutting-edge social science methodologies either for their own use or for teaching purposes and for supervised research. No doctoral program can sustain itself academically without an important element of methodological training. This makes even more sense for a PhD in a field such as Globalization, where the thrust is interdisciplinary. Leading departments of political science, international relations, and economics all have a heavy concentration of methodologically-savvy faculty members. At the minimum, GIA needs to replicate at least some of this. I note that some of the recent junior faculty appointments have taken this appropriate route. I also inquired about the USF library collection and the library's staff quality for the proposed doctoral program. Practically everyone interviewed stated that the library's resources in this areas is at least adequate and the reference librarians exceptionally helpful and forthcoming.

If the proposed Globalization doctoral program takes off successfully, then more teaching assistants can become available for large undergraduate classes. Moreover, it may also be possible (at the Dean's discretion) that occasionally one or more PhD-level students can be made available as research assistants to a selected number of highly productive members of the faculty.

Concluding Remarks

This reviewer left USF and the Department with a positive sense of the place. It is abundantly clear that the University has made important progress in its quality. There seems to be a sense of vision and purpose shared by all administrators and many of the faculty and students. No one minimizes the enormity of the task ahead and the difficulty of achieving the stated goals of the University, but all think that it can be done with hard work, dedication, and collective effort. The Department of Government and International Affairs shares this vision and dedication; it is clearly in the right quality trajectory. With the present strong and effective GIA leadership, and the continued University support, the task of proper faculty recruitment is clearly manageable. Political Science/International Relations is too important a discipline for teaching, research, or employment in private and public sectors. It plays a central role in the university's educational process similar to disciplines such as History, Biology, Mathematics, Economics, and the like. It simply cannot suffer benign neglect.

Dear Dr.Khator:

The Commission on Peer Review and Accreditation of the National Association of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration (NASPAA) reviewed your institution's Master in Public Administration program during the 2003-04 academic year. You were identified by the program as the Chief Academic Officer of your institution, and on behalf of the Commission, I am pleased to provide a copy of the letter reporting the results of the accreditation review.

As part of the review process, the masters program conducted a year long self study, submitted a self study volume, underwent an interim review by the Commission, hosted a three day site visit with three members drawn from peer institutions and practitioners, and received the Commission's final decision in July.

NASPAA's Commission on Peer Review and Accreditation is committed to the Association of Specialized and Professional Accreditors' "Code of Good Practice," which includes the respect for institutional autonomy and professionalism in the conduct of accreditation operations. It is in that spirit that we present this letter to you. The Chair of the Commission, Professor Stuart Bretschneider of Syracuse University, would welcome any questions or comments you might have about the review (sibretsc@maxwell.syr.edu, tel. 315.443.1890). Should you have any questions after September 1, please contact the incoming Commission Chair, Jeff Rafell of the University of Delaware, at (rafell@udel.edu, tel. 302.831.1658.) Thank you for supporting the work of the program in Public Administration at your university.

Sincerely,

Laurel McFarland

FROM: Stuart Bretschneider, Chairman
Commission on Peer Review and Accreditation

DATE: July 10, 2003

SUBJECT: Accreditation Review

On behalf of the Commission on Peer Review and Accreditation (COPRA), I am pleased to inform you that your Master of Public Administration program has been found to be in conformity with NASPAA Standards. Your program will be reaccredited for a period of seven years and included on the Annual Roster of Accredited Programs.

COPRA also looks for a continued demonstration that your program seeks diversity in its faculty (Standard 5.5) and asks that in future annual reports that you provide updated evidence of actions associated with implementation of specific diversity plans for all individuals involved in instruction including but not limited to full time faculty, part time faculty, adjunct faculty, lecturers, instructors involved in delivering program instruction. This information should include but not be limited to the data identified in the COPRA instructions for self studies under standard 5.5.

I want to thank you for your cooperation and continued support of the accreditation process. Please note that the Commission will review each of your annual reports to determine progress toward implementation, and they will become a permanent part of your folder for your next accreditation review. We look forward to receiving your first annual report, by May 1 of 2004. If you have any questions, please call me at 315.443.1890, or email sibretsc@maxwell.syr.edu. Questions about next year's annual report should be directed COPRA's Managing Director, Laurel McFarland (mcfarland@naspaa.org).

NASPAA Site Visit Team Report for UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH FLORIDA (Tampa, FL) March 20-22, 2003

I. Introduction

A. Summary of site visit activities

Members of the Site Visit Team:

Kathryn G. Denhardt, University of Delaware (Chair)
Gerald T. Gabris, Northern Illinois University
Anita Favors, City of Tallahassee, Florida

Site Visit took place March 20 – 22, 2003. All members of the Site Visit Team were scheduled to meet in Tampa at 1:30 pm on Thursday, March 20, just after the U.S. invasion of Iraq. Though Jerry Gabris and Kathy Denhardt were able to get to Tampa as scheduled, Anita Favors found it necessary to stay in Tallahassee in order to carry out her responsibilities (as City Manager) for public safety during high alert status. Joan Pynes (USF Principal Representative), Kathryn Denhardt, and Gerald Gabris met at 1:30 pm on Thursday, March 20, to discuss how to proceed in the unexpected absence of Anita Favors. A consensus decision was made to proceed with the site visit since two members of the team had arrived, and all appointments were already scheduled. We determined that Anita Favors would be asked for input based on her reading of the Self-Study and her familiarity with the USF program through fellow professionals in the Florida community.

Site Visit Schedule:

Thursday, March 20, 2003

1:30 pm	Joan Pynes, Director, Public Administration Program
2:00 pm	Mohsen Milani, Chair, Department of Government & International Affairs
3:30 pm	Edwin Benton, Faculty member, Public Administration Program
5:00 pm	Joan Pynes, Jamil Jreisat, John Daly, Stephen Calabrese, Carole Pettijohn (Nucleus Faculty for MPA Program)
6:00 pm	Reception for approximately 25 MPA alumni, advisory board members and students. (Faculty members were not present. Site Visit team members heard from each person present.)
8:00 pm	Denhardt and Gabris had dinner and discussed findings.

Friday, March 21, 2003

9:00 am Met with faculty as a group – Joan Pynes, Jamil Jreisat, Carole Pettijohn, Stephen Calabrese, John Daly, Susan MacManus, and Janna Merrick were present.

10:00 – 1:30 Met individually with Stephen Calabrese, John Daly, Carole Pettijohn, Jamil Jreisat, and Joan Pynes
1:30 pm Toured program offices and received additional documents for review
3:00 pm Bruce Cochrane and Kathleen Heide, Associate Deans, College of Arts & Sciences
4:00 pm David Stamps, Provost and Kathleen Moore, Associate Vice-President Academic Affairs
5:00 pm Visit to USF Downtown Center – toured facility and visited with adjunct faculty member teaching a course in the facility at the time.

Saturday, March 22, 2003
9:00 am Gabris and Denhardt met to discuss findings and report

B. Summary of basic facts about University of South Florida

The University of South Florida is a state-funded public university. USF began operation in 1960 and is classified as a Doctoral/Research-Extensive university by the Carnegie Foundation. The Master of Public Administration (MPA) program was established in 1977 and has been in continuous operation since that time. The MPA program is applying for re-accreditation, and operates as an autonomous graduate program within the Department of Government and International Affairs. Other degree programs offered by the Department include:

MA in Political Science
BA in Political Science
BA in International Studies

II. Background and Mission

The mission of the USF MPA program is to provide in-service as well as the pre-service students with a unique opportunity for continuing education, training, and development. The MPA curriculum is designed to offer students applied managerial skills, analytical capabilities, and familiarity with relevant technologies, as well as a variety of specialized courses that enhance and deepen their particular professional and career interests. The mission of the MPA program is also to encourage diversity of views and perspectives on the field; to promote ethical conduct in public service; to nurture greater sense of responsibility and accountability among students as current and future managers; and to urge faculty members to continue to provide expert knowledge in their teaching and research. Finally, the program is mindful of the need to improve and upgrade the practice of management in public organizations, expand the norms of democratic responsibility by developing linkages with the larger communities served, and promote partnerships with community agencies in the USF regional service area.

COPRA raised questions about why the mission statement did not specifically mention preparation for local and state government (since 55% of graduates work in this arena) and whether there was an orderly process and specific strategies and timetables for achieving the mission of the program. In discussions with faculty (and in the program's reply to COPRA), the faculty expresses a strategic preference for not narrowing the program focus to local and state government. With the addition of Joan Pynes, the faculty has additional expertise and resources to work with the expanding nonprofit community. The success of the Graduate Certificate in Nonprofit Management indicates the viability of maintaining a broader definition of "public service" in the mission statement. Courses in the program do incorporate local government material, and students often select projects with a local government focus. While the program strategically wants a broad mission, it could be advised to include as part of its mission an urban management component. The purpose would not be to narrow the mission, but rather to acknowledge local government as a significant focus and perhaps leverage their ability to seek an additional faculty member with expertise in this area in order to enhance this strength.

Discussions with members of the program's Advisory Board indicates that they were involved in defining the mission for the program and are comfortable that this is both appropriate and responsive to the needs of the various constituencies and the regional community. Discussions with students and alumni of the program confirm that they perceive the program is preparing them to serve in a variety of settings, including local and state government, nonprofits, and federal government.

The program utilizes a variety of methods for getting feedback on their mission and how well they are delivering on what they design, such as annual surveys of graduates, utilization of the Advisory Board, course evaluations, and ongoing faculty assessment of the program and curriculum. The innovations designed and implemented in recent years (including graduate certificate programs to meet specific needs in the community as well as to create awareness and demand for the MPA program) suggest that the program does have an orderly process for developing and implementing new strategies.

III. Analysis of Concerns Raised by COPRA

Item 1: Standard 2.1 (Mission Statement)

As mentioned in previous section, the program has consulted with faculty, students, alumni, and the program's Advisory Board to develop the current mission statement and strategies for achieving that mission. They have demonstrated an "orderly process for developing appropriate strategies and objectives consistent with its mission, resources, and constituencies." With the advice and counsel of the Advisory Board, the faculty made a strategic decision not to focus the mission on local and state government even though 55% of the alumni work in that arena. The constituency for nonprofit management is growing, as evidenced by the success of the Graduate Certificate in Nonprofit Management, and the leadership of Joan Pynes is helping to grow that constituency. The program mission is intended to encompass all the sectors, while allowing students the flexibility to tailor their work to fit the sector in which they are working or expect to work.

Item 2: Standard 5.5 (Faculty Diversity)

The Public Administration faculty has hired three new members since the last NASPAA review. Two of those new faculty members are women, including the director of the program. In total, 40% of the faculty are women and 10% are African American. One adjunct instructor is African American, and two of the graduate research assistants are African American. This level of diversity has been achieved through an intentional commitment to diversity and faculty recruitment efforts that reflect that commitment.

Item 3: Standard 7.0 (Student Services)

The Commission requested additional information concerning the number of classes offered at off-site locations (including regional campuses), the number of core and adjunct faculty teaching the off-site courses, and the number of students who take the majority of their classes at off-site locations. In addition, the Commission sought clarification about how the program assures that student services are adequate at these off site locations. The off-site locations include:

- North Pinellas
- Lakeland
- St. Petersburg
- Sarasota
- Brooksville
- Downtown Center (Tampa)

The courses offered in off-site locations are normally taught by the core faculty, just as the on-campus courses are taught. During the site visit team's meeting with students, alumni and Advisory Board members, several people expressed their high levels of satisfaction with the off-site facilities and the services received there. The site visit team toured the Downtown Center (Tampa) and found it to be an excellent facility with a variety of services available for students. In fact, the computer lab at the Downtown Center is of such high quality it is deemed preferable to those available on the main campus.

There was no indication that students who attended courses off-site viewed this as detrimental to their education. In fact, students who took the majority of their courses at off-site locations viewed this as a distinct advantage to them as it brought the core faculty to them rather than having students travel to the main campus. Students also expressed satisfaction with the variety of locations and opportunities to interact with students from throughout the region served by USF.

The MPA program has done a very good job of working with their pre-service students in obtaining professionally rewarding and very educational internships. In interviews with several pre-service students we found high levels of satisfaction with the program and the support they received in obtaining internships and placements.

Item 4: Standard 7.1 (Advisement and Appraisal)

In 1998 29 students were admitted to the MPA program, bringing the total number of students in the program to 95 students. Of those, 29 students twelve became inactive by the time of the self-study. The program offered reasonable explanations of why eight of those students became inactive (e.g. elimination of state tuition waivers, changes in personal lives of the students, and GPA dropping below 3.0). The program did not know the reasons for four of the students becoming inactive.

In a program that serves students working full time and pursuing their MPA on a part time basis, it is not unusual for a significant number of students to become inactive for reasons that do not reflect negatively on the program, curriculum, or faculty. Conversations with current students revealed nothing that would indicate the program was failing to serve students well. Conversations with faculty indicated that applicants who do not have strong undergraduate academic records are encouraged to take courses in the program before an admission decision is made. Students who are successful (earning an A or B) in these courses are admitted. As in all programs, some students who are expected to be successful are not, and fall below the 3.0 GPA. The program handles these cases appropriately, and this accounts for some of the attrition. Advisement for all students appears to be acceptable.

Item 5: Standard 8.1 (Budget)

Though USF is experiencing budget cuts (as are many universities across the country) the cuts are being managed in a way that maintains the quality of the experience for students, the course loads for faculty, and the commitment to scholarship. Class sizes for some MPA courses have increased, and there has been some reduction in the number of off-site courses taught (e.g. the St. Petersburg location) in order to maintain the current teaching load for faculty of two courses in the fall semester and two courses in the spring semester. Summer courses are taught on an overload basis at the discretion of faculty members. Courses such as the capstone course Practice of Public Management have maintained smaller class sizes in order to meet the needs of students and maintain quality experience for faculty.

IV. Standard by Standard Assessment

Standard 1.0: Eligibility for Peer Review and Accreditation
The USF program appears to meet eligibility criteria.

Standard 2.0: Program Mission
Discussed in Sections II and III of this report.

Standard 3.0: Program Jurisdiction
Conversations with program faculty and with administrators at the Department, College, and University levels indicate that the Public Administration program faculty have independent jurisdiction over the program. The MPA Director hired since the last NASPAA review has established an excellent working relationship with the Chair of the Department of Government and International Affairs, and the program governance is clearly in the hands of the public administration faculty. High levels of trust, respect, and collegiality are in evidence between the program faculty and the administrative units in which they operate.

College and University level administrators perceive the MPA program as a key component in the University's community outreach mission. The strategic services and educational opportunities provided by the MPA program to the public service community enhance the visibility and value of USF. It appears that these administrative levels wish to be responsive to any ideas and suggestions the MPA program has for ways to facilitate and expand those efforts. For example, there was recognition that the policy of utilizing graduate assistants only for teaching purposes might not be appropriate for the MPA program, and a proposal by the program to utilize graduate assistants for research and public service efforts would likely be well received. In addition, there was recognition that changes in the relationship between the Institute of Government and the MPA program might enhance the ability of the MPA faculty to provide service and outreach to the community.

Standard 4.0: Curriculum
The 45 credit program provides coverage of the curriculum components defined by NASPAA, as well as providing the components necessary to meet the mission of the program. Students take 27 credits of required coursework, and either 15 or 18 credit hours of elective coursework, depending on the exit option selected by the student. Most students select the capstone course as their exit option, and take 18 credit hours of electives. Specializations include:

- General Public Management
- Public Organizational Management

- Budgeting and Financial Management
- Nonprofit Management
- Urban Management and Planning

The General Public Management option is most frequently selected by students, and extensive course offerings are provided for that option. Course offerings in the other areas of specialization are more limited, but do offer advanced training in each specialization and sufficient electives to meet the requirements of the program.

Standard 5.0: Faculty

The USF Public Administration program has five core faculty members exclusively devoted to the Public Administration program, plus five other faculty who teach in the program as part of their load. The faculty represent a diversity of strengths, interests, and backgrounds. The faculty all have Ph.D. degrees and only two are at the Assistant Professor level and untenured. Indications are that both untenured faculty members are receiving the support needed to be successful in teaching and research, and are on track for achieving tenure in due time.

The USF program makes good use of the strong practitioner community as adjunct faculty members, providing both students and faculty with access to the experience and expertise of practitioners. In addition, all members of the faculty are committed to serving the public administration practitioner community and engage in various types of consulting and collaborations to serve that community. Indications from the practitioner community are that the faculty are highly regarded for the work they do.

The faculty demonstrate a strong commitment to teaching excellence, and work collaboratively with one another to develop innovative courses and successful teaching strategies for all members of the faculty.

Research productivity among the public administration faculty is among the strongest of all programs in the Department of Government and International Affairs. Administrators at the College and University levels commend the work of the faculty members in research, teaching, and public service.

Standard 6.0: Admission of Students

The admissions policies and processes of the program are consistent with the requirements of the Florida State University System, contribute to the diversity of the student body, and are designed to support the success of those students admitted to the program.

Standard 7:0: Students Services

Discussed in Section III of this report.

Standard 8.0: Support Services and Facilities

Library services provide excellent on-line access to databases and other research mechanisms. This serves students and faculty well at both the main campus and off-site locations. The program has one administrative staff person who appears very capable of handling the needs of the program, and is highly regarded by faculty and students alike. The instructional equipment, faculty offices, and classrooms appear adequate.

Standard 9.0: Off-Campus and Distance Education

Not applicable. There is only one, unitary MPA program even though some of the courses are offered at off-site location.

V. Commendations and Recommendations

Over the past five years, the USF MPA program has recruited three new high quality faculty members, established a presence and curriculum in the nonprofit arena, and developed a congenial, collaborative culture. It provides a solid program for students, and a positive environment for faculty members. Faculty in the program reach out to partner with the practitioner community in a variety of ways, and have done an excellent job of leading USF's efforts to serve the region. Alumni of the program and members of the Advisory Council are highly placed in organizations and governments around the region, helping to enhance the reputation of the program. Faculty members are committed to excellence in teaching, and it shows. We commend the USF MPA program on all these efforts!

The program does face some challenges, including budget constraints and rumblings in the department that teaching loads might be increased. Conversations with the Department Chair, Associate Deans of the Colleges, and the Provost indicate that because MPA program faculty are productive scholars and teaching at the graduate level, there is little likelihood that the teaching load of those faculty would be increased beyond the 2-2 load they currently teach. We strongly recommend that the current teaching load be retained because it is essential to maintaining the quality of teaching while at the same time permitting the faculty to be productive scholars.

The MPA faculty is active in public service to regional governments and nonprofits, and this is recognized and appreciated by those organizations as well as by the University. At this point, few of those efforts are conducted through University auspices (e.g. through the Institute of Government), and therefore the MPA program and the University do not have access to the supplementary income that such contracts might provide. During tight budgetary times, such sources of revenue could be very beneficial and we encourage looking into ways that faculty could more effectively collaborate with units such as the Institute of Government to support faculty in these outreach efforts. Such efforts could enhance the program's ability to fund research assistantships and conduct applied projects as part of the classroom curriculum. In addition, providing such infrastructure of support for ongoing service to the community might provide the kind of revenue stream that could support an additional faculty member whose expertise and interests would enhance such outreach as well as the MPA academic program.

We encourage the program to continue their support of the untenured faculty members by keeping their teaching loads at the base level, mentoring them in both scholarship and teaching, and minimizing pressure to teach overload courses in the summer months even when this would benefit the program.

The faculty, staff, students, alumni and Advisory Board of the USF MPA program impress the Site Visit Team as highly professional, collegial, and committed. We thank them for their openness to our inquiries and for their cordial welcome during our visit.

Dissertation

Title: Retrospective Economic Voting in Korea and Taiwan: Taking Contexts Seriously

Committee: Tse-Min Lin (co-chair), Brian Roberts (co-chair), Roderick P. Hart, Daron Shaw, Kenneth Greene.

Abstract: Economic voting literature generally makes a strong claim that economic voting should affect individual voting behavior in all contexts. This dissertation shows that (1) economic voting has surprisingly limited explanatory power outside of western countries and (2) preexisting social divisions can become politicized in a way that trump economic voting in new democracies. In my dissertation, I compare the effect of personal and national economic evaluations on individual vote choice in Korea and Taiwan. My research proposes that understanding social, political, and informational context is the key to understanding why the effect of personal and national economic evaluations vary not only across countries but also across individuals. I explain the varying effects of economic conditions in the two countries based on changes in the availability and accessibility of economic issues and on the clarity of alternatives. I utilize information-processing models developed in social psychology but place more emphasis on contextual factors as sources for the availability and accessibility of issues. My project is unique and significant in terms of both its theoretical and methodological aspects. Theoretically, this project will, first, allow us to examine how far the economic voting model travels in other countries. Second, my project is interdisciplinary, studying politics from both sociological and psychological perspectives. Methodologically, my research applies both in-depth contextual analysis and rigorous statistical analysis to Korean and Taiwanese vote choice, whereas quantitative studies are dominant in previous economic voting literature.

Research in Progress

"Political information and participation in voting, campaigns, and protests in the U.S. and Korea"

(This paper investigates whether political information has any effect on individual participation in voting, election campaigns, and protests and whether individuals learn politics from participating. Empirical analyses of the two cases studies, the U.S. and Korea, suggest that the influence of political participation on political information is stronger and more substantial than the opposite. The finding confirms the assumption of participatory democracy that participation is not only a result of democracy but also a means to consolidate democracy, "self-sustaining" and making people "better citizens".)
